4.7.17 Manual setup instructions

- In `gnunet.conf` set in section `DATABASE` the value for `DATABASE` to `postgres`.
- Access Postgres to create a user:

with Postgres 8.x, use:

su - postgres
$ createuser

and enter the name of the user running GNUnet for the role interactively. Then, when prompted, do not set it to superuser, allow the creation of databases, and do not allow the creation of new roles.

with Postgres 9.x, use:

su - postgres
$ createuser -d $GNUNET_USER

where `$GNUNET_USER` is the name of the user running GNUnet.

- As that user (so typically as user "gnunet"), create a database (or two):

$ createdb gnunet
this way you can run "make check"
$ createdb gnutestcheck

Now you should be able to start `gnunet-arm`.

4.7.18 Testing the setup manually

You may want to try if the database connection works. First, again login as the user who will run `gnunet-arm`. Then use:

$ psql gnunet # or gnutestcheck
gnunet-> \dt

If, after you have started `gnunet-arm` at least once, you get a `gn090` table here, it probably works.
